British tots are about to put their American counterparts to shame with the MYMO, a pendant-style cellphone designed specifically for the very young people. Since your toddler might not be quite ready for full dialing privileges, the MYMO has just three buttons and can only call out to up to five numbers that you program into it (though if your five-year-old already has that many people they need to call on a regular basis you might be a bad parent). And most helpfully if you don't feel like chipping them or something, the MYMO also comes with a service called Loc8tion which can help track down your child should they wander off.
